THE NEW STYLES-HOW TO KEEP AND

With the growing demand for laces, says the few York World, and for such a variety of uses the supply has come in all kinds and qualities. The lace of this second period, which is the point lace more generally used now, though very beautiful, is deficient in solidity and that purity of design which marked the old artistic kind, that seemed to carry out an original fancy and not a more copy of some pattern.

One would naturally conclude that an art depending so much on individual skill and taste would be liable to vary exceedingly; nevertheless, it is a fact that all the kinds are quickly placed into a few well-marked groups under three distinct classes.

Guipure, which comprises all true needlework, whether ancient or modern, ranks first with its varieties of rose point, in which the figures are in high relief, having a rich embossed appearance. Point Venetian, point Portuguese, point Maltese, in all of these the pattern is flattes than in the rose point d'Alencon and Brussels. These last two are still made, the modern d'Alencon being quite equal in beauty and value to that of one hundred years ago.

The second class is known as the cushion or bobbin lace, in which the threads of the bobbins are twisted or plaited around the pins which hold the patterns so as to form the network arrangement which characterizes this division, under which comes the Spanish, Brussels, Mechlin, Valenciennes, Dutch, Lisle, Chantilly, silk and cotton blond, Limerick and Houlton, which last has of late years been the most beautiful of all the varieties made in Great Britain.

The third class is the machine made. This, by its rapid improvement and wonderful devel-

The third class is the machine made. This, by its rapid improvement and won-lerful development, has worked a complete revolution in the lace trade, moderating the prices of homemade, and bringing within the reach of all a beautiful and inexpensive lace.

While all these kinds are more or less usel, Velencienes and point applique are uncores. While all these kinds are more or less use 1, Velenciennes and point applique are unquestionably the popular kinds; the former, though worn by all ages, from its light and airy effect, is considered especially appropriate for young misses and children, while the other is worn by young, middle-aged and elderly ladies. It is noticeable, however, that those who are able to satisfy their fancies very much esteem old laces before modern productions. Such heavy laces as point de Venise, binche and point d'Argenton, which formerly were seen only as trimmings on the richest of silks and velvets, are now worn with toilets of thin texture, and even on ball dresses.

French lace is being made to imitate the more expensive thread so perfecily that it is found on elaborate black silk dresses as well as on velvet cloaks, while ladies who are even more economically inclined are using for trim-ming cashmeres, bigoones and other worsted goods, the Yac and Cluny laces instead of the goods, the Yac and Cluny laces instead of the guipure.

A novelty in vails is presented in the long Spanish net scarfs, which are made to serve a double purpose by covering the face with the centre of the same, while the sides are caught back and fastened to the hat or bonnet with the usual vail pin. Without being crossed, the ends are brought forward under the chin and thrown about the neck, where they lie in an easy, careless manner, pleasant to see. The net has large figures of drooping leaves or clusters of flowers, which, after finding through these designs a thin space for the eyes, veil these designs a thin space for the eyes, veil and almost conceal the features. A new net, dotted closely with the finest of jet beads, made and worn in the usual styles, is also in-the bottom and finished with a wide hem, held in place by one, two, three, and sometimes more satin cords, is ordered almost exclusively.

The unlimited variety of articles in way of decorations for the neck is something really wonderful. Ruffs of every description and material; jabots, from the quiet bow of ribbon and inexpensive lace to those masterpieces in their way of intricate folds of rich creamy fabrics, with touches of delicate, harmonious colors here and there laying over the front of the corsage and sometimes reaching to the waist, give every lady an opportunity of gratifying the simplest or most fastidious of tastes. In addition to the styles already so well known is the revival of the white muslin tie with a finish of lace ends, and the ruffles with their dotted edges in colored chenfilles and silks.

The fichus, or cape, as they are now called, differ little, if any, from those worn earlier in the season. A tendency to abolish the long graceful ends and wear only those which cross and fasten at the waist behind is noticeable. Scarfs in large figured nets, worn in the same manner as the capes, are in high favor.

The deep flounces for overskirts and ruffles to evening dresses are made in exquisite designs both in real and machine lace. In consideration of its good imitation and comparative cheapness, the latter is oftener seen than the rare old lace.

Of all the articles of her toilet, there is perhaps no one thing so invested with associations and sentiment as a lady's handkerchief—surely mone to which she gives more solicitous attention in selecting and care in using. But a mere bit of cambric and lace, it is expected that the web of point lace, or point de Venise, or Honiton, or Valenciennes, or whatever the fancy or purse of the wearer may suggest, will be of the best and finest of its kind. While all varieties of lace are admirable, the shape of the hand-kerchief must be square, with or without clipped corners.

At all reliable places where rare and expensive laces are sold, recommendations ar business will return the same Iresu and Constitution of the machine laces, or those not sufficiently valuable to justify the expense attending the services of a professional cleaner, there are many receipts given for bleaching and restoring the color. The simple ones usually bring us the most satisfactory results.

For cleaning white lace, wash and rinse gently through two or three changes of a strong suds of soft warm water and fine toilet soap; after pressing as dry as possible with the strong suds of soft warm water and fine toilet soap; after pressing as dry as possible with the hands, patiently pat and pull the same in shape, being careful to put each little point and figure in place, until almost dry, then fold and lay between heavy books.

For removing folds and creases in either white or black lace, wind the same closely round a glass bottle. After fastening the ends, so that the lace will remain firm, hold it over a steam from clear water until thoroughly damp, then pull through the fingers, and dry and press it in the same manner as above suggested.

For restoring the color to black lace which has worn brown and rusty wash in beer or hard cider, after which straighten it out and carefully pin down on some plain surface, to remain until dry.
